Business Insights

The Olist E-Commerce Performance Dashboard was built to analyze order, payment, delivery, and revenue data across Brazil's online marketplace, with the goal of identifying patterns that can inform business decision-making. By examining order status, payment behavior, product category performance, and geographic distribution of sales, several clear trends emerge that highlight both the strengths of the current operation and areas with room for strategic improvement. The following insights summarize the most significant findings drawn from the dashboard's visuals.

Insight 1 - Revenue is heavily concentrated in a few categories

Health & Beauty and Sports & Leisure are the top two product categories by revenue, together with the next few categories (Watches & Gifts, Computers, Cool Stuff) accounting for a disproportionate share of the total 1.05M in revenue. This suggests the business could prioritize marketing spend and inventory investment toward these high-performing categories.

Insight 2 - Credit card dominates payment behavior

Credit card is by far the preferred payment method, used in 72.62% of transactions (6.01K orders), followed by boleto at 20.27%. Voucher and debit card together make up less than 6% of payments, suggesting the business should ensure credit card processing remains seamless while boleto support stays available for the meaningful minority who rely on it.

Insight 3 - Strong on-time delivery, but regional sales are highly uneven

The On-Time Delivery Rate stands at 95%, indicating strong logistics performance overall. However, sales are heavily concentrated geographically - Sao Paulo (SP) alone accounts for 40,858 of the total 97,658 orders (roughly 42%), with Rio de Janeiro (RJ) and Minas Gerais (MG) as distant second and third. This suggests significant opportunity to grow market share in underrepresented states.

Taken together, these insights point to a business that is operationally strong but geographically and categorically concentrated. The high on-time delivery rate (95%) reflects a reliable logistics operation worth maintaining, while the heavy reliance on a small number of product categories and the dominance of São Paulo in overall sales suggest the business has room to diversify. To build on its current strengths, the company should consider expanding marketing efforts in underrepresented states such as Rio de Janeiro and Minas Gerais, exploring growth opportunities in mid-performing product categories beyond Health & Beauty and Sports & Leisure, and continuing to support multiple payment methods particularly boleto, to maintain accessibility for customers who do not rely on credit cards. These steps would help the business reduce dependency on its current top performers and build a more balanced, resilient growth strategy going forward.
